

Wally the blue whale and the bull shark

Wally the whale was reading his favourite book Finding Dory. He started hearing noises so he puts his book away and started looking around carefully bit by bit. The sound started to creep him out but he said to himself, "I'm a big boy, I'm not afraid of anything."

Then a loud noise scared him out of his skin. Huge white teeth shimmered at him. It was a shark! The shark's eyes glinted with malice and hunger. He asked through a blinding grin, "You like books?" Wally nodded. "I have lots in a much comfier place than this wreck. You interested?" Wally nodded again. He followed the shark and told him all about his favourite stories,

"Did you know that I've have read all of the versions of Tiddler in this water?" Wally explained.

"That's great kid," the shark replied sarcastically. Wally felt an urge in his body telling him to swim away but he didn't listen to his instincts. He started to approach a dark, gloomy, mysterious cave. He was shivering with fear and a tremble started to awake. "Hurry up Wally, I've got a dinner reservation," the shark said with a grin.

"Yes, just coming," trembled Wally.

"We're here! I know it looks dark on the outside but trust me it's much better on the inside. I hope you don't mind but I brought some friends with me," the shark said.

"Um yes but I'm gonna wait here if that is okay with you," Wally replied.

"Wally no, don't be a wimp come on," the shark insisted. As Wally swam into the dark void, they pounced..

THE MORAL OF THE STORY

Don't trust strangers even if they seem trustworthy. Although it seems like paradise where you're going, it may not always be what you expect when you get there. This story also includes peer pressure and temptation which you should not trust.
