

The innocent pug, the naive hippo

and the devious chicken

One day Humphrey the hippo was just strolling along, minding his own business when a chicken named Dave came up to him and said in a humble way, "I will give you all my food and shelter if you throw that young pug, Bob, into the river."

"Whatever, I would do anything for food and a place to sleep," Humphrey replied.

"Wonderful tell me when you are done," said Dave.

Bob was sitting on the riverbank feeding the ducks when Humphrey jumped up at the young pug and launched him into the deep dangerous river. A giraffe shouted, "hey what are you doing to that poor pug!" Humphrey ran but little did he know the giraffe was a police officer.

After what felt like an eternity Humphrey was in court about to seal his fate. Suddenly the judge walked out of their judge chamber and declared that Humphrey should go to jail. Two days passed and the police were interrogating Humphrey asking for his opinion on the matter. Humphrey was in his cell rotting away when the door opened and someone else entered...it was DAVE!

The moral of our story is to think before you act, don't always trust or listen to people because there can be consequences and to always tell the truth. Like in the story when Humphrey listened to Dave and got put in jail for it, but also how Humphrey told the truth and landed Dave in jail right there with him. STAY SAFE. Don't always trust people and you will go a long way
